Looking for Native Women for a Group Discussion in Los Angeles

Are you a Native woman who has moved from a tribal community who now lives in Los Angeles? We need you to share some of your thoughts about health care.

Our purpose is to understand issues that Native women have in accessing health care in urban areas. We would like to hear your advise and opinions to improve materials and information for navigating health care for new urban Natives. Several of these sessions are being held around the country, with different groups of Native women.

When:
Thursday, March 12, 2009, 12:30 p.m.-2:30 p.m.

Who’s Eligible:
• Native women
• Age 40 or older
• Currently live in Los Angeles, & have lived in LA at least 6 months
  • Must have used tribal health care services

What’s Involved:
• Sharing your thoughts in a group of about 7 Native women
• A friendly, supportive environment at UCLA with lunch provided
  • $50 compensation for your time

To Participate:
To participate or for more information, please contact Delight Satter (Confederated Tribes of Grand Ronde) or Courtnay Phillips at 310.794.0975 or email Courtnay.Phillips@ucla.edu.

This is an activity of The American Indian Cancer Collaborative for Women’s Health at the Native American Cancer Research, Corp. in partnership with the UCLA Center for Health Policy, the Intertribal Council of Michigan, the Aberdeen Area Tribal Chairmens’ Health Board, Nebraska Urban American Indian Clinic. This project is funded by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.